SWEEP-N-FILL III

Developed by a superintendent, the Sweep-N-Fill III ground driven unit mimics push broom action which eliminates sand bridging of aerified holes; resulting in completely filled holes while using up to 20 per cent less sand. Lifts lateral shoots so effectively, the need for verticutting is greatly reduced and leaves a perfectly groomed appearance with improved stimp meter readings. All of this and more, without bruising! OVER 1800 SOLD WORLDWIDE.

HOW HEALTHY IS YOUR TURF?

Bac-Pack, beneficial microbial blend, is changing the way golf course supers manage disease control. Bac-Pack has solved disease problems for supers since it was developed as the original biofungicide for turf in the 1980's.

"Bac-Pack has worked as well as any fungicide I've used and it's less money per application than any fungicide I've used. We've cut our greens fungicides about 65%, right about 2/3 for this year, compared to last. We're making Bac-Pack a cornerstone of our Agronomic program for 2018."

Tedesco – The Sinking of a Ship, The Birth of a Club

by Jay Flemma

[Author's Note: In a first for Golf Course Trades, we are publishing a two-part piece on Marblehead, Massachusetts' Tedesco Country Club, a course designed and redesigned by many hands, including Wayne Stiles, Jon Van Kleek, and Donald Ross, and most recently renovated by Ron Forse. The course is named after one of the most famous shipwrecks in New England, the cargo bark Tedesco, which sank in a blizzard offshore over 160 years ago. To stretch my legs as a bit as a writer, the magazine encouraged me to write a short piece of historical fiction about the sinking of the ship and the naming of the club – something completely different from bunkers and drainage, soils and supers. Next month, we'll meet Peter Hasak the super, Ron Forse the renovation architect, and explore the course in depth. But for this month, sit back and allow us at GCT to spin you a yarn of wooden ships on the water, a fictional account of the sinking of the Tedesco, along with the true story of the naming of the club...]

---Off the coast of Swampscott, Massachusetts
January 18, 1857---

Salty Old Joe was holding court in the mess again, spinning his yarns to little Jeffrey the blond-haired cabin boy, Jensen the cook, Warren the carpenter, and any other hand foolish enough to sit within earshot. A half-toothless mouth gnawed on salt pork and hard bread in between his lurid jeremiads, and when he grinned, food remnants peppered his gums. It only added to his intended effect.

"It's red sun in the mornin', sailor take warnin'! Red sun at night, sailor's delight, but they never said anything about the ghost ship, did they?" Joe growled.

At that the cabin boy's eyes grew wide as pie plates, and he hugged Revere, the young Gloucester crewman next to him with a squeal of terror and delight. Old Joe pressed his advantage.

"It came out of nowhere...in a storm just like this one," he intoned breathlessly, as though casting an incantation. "Out of nowhere I say! A great black cloud of smoke and oakum shrouds her, she stinks of sulphur and gunpowder, a ghostly captain with no face steers her helm, and with all the cannon fire of Hell, she'll shatter our masts, burn our sails, and send us all down to meet Ol' Nick!"

He gave a great snarl - "YEAAAARRRRRRRGGGGHH-HHH!" spitting crumbs all over the table - and started tickling little Jeffrey, who exploded in shrieks and giggles.

"Oh, you're full of piss and wind, Joe," laughed Dodge, another of the young hands, a Portlandian, strong and strapping. He took a long pull on his grog, black Caribbean rum diluted with water and spiced with real citrus. The ship's Captain had received a great treasure from the Widow Winship, the mother of the cabin boy. It was a small keg of pure lemon juice, worth its weight in diamonds for its beneficial effects in staving off scurvy. The widow's late husband, a ship's doctor and the Captain's friend, was killed four years earlier when a storm wrecked the cargo ship Forest Queen onto Cliff Beach in Scituate. The Captain considered it his duty to care for the boy by taking him to sea, as the father would have wanted. And the grateful widow's lemon juice, useless to her, was regarded by the crew as the nearest thing to a holy relic.

But beneath the joviality in the mess, concern simmered inside Dodge. He was recently married to Molly Andrews, daughter of the Reverend Andrews of St. George's Church. Molly had three sisters, Sissy, Lily, and Sarah, and when Dodge was with them, he was horribly outnumbered, four-to-one. This was his first trip since marrying the brown-haired lass with the almond-shaped green eyes, and he wanted to impress her family by coming home with splendid booty. A successful round trip – from New England to Spain and Portugal delivering dried cod called "baccalau" to Europe and bringing back wine, raisins, salt, olives, and sherry to America – would provide him a handsome share. Dodge could buy Molly some "pritty jools" as he put it, "pritty jools indeed!"

Indeed all the hands were eager to be home after so long at sea. Life on board a cargo sailing ship was chaos - beloved, maddening, addictive chaos. Living exclusively in the moment, the whole world was reduced to a tiny wooden box tossed about on the endless waves. Life was reduced to the next wave, the next swell, the next change of the breeze, and a few shrewd views of the night sky through the Captain's sextant.

It was a happy life, happier still with wind in the sails and following seas. Captain Peterson was taut, but not a tyrant, and the first mate, sailing master, and bosun all respected the hands and treated them well. They had coffee, toast, salt pork, fish, salt beef, molasses, beans, bread, and of course rum.

"I'd rather have them six sheets to the wind on occasion than unhappy," the Captain believed. So he'd give the men an extra ration of grog every time they performed their duties with a little extra zeal. They had behaved quite well during the dangerous squalls off the coast of Portugal and again passing the Azores. Now the 396 tonnes, 121 foot long cargo bark named for famous Spanish opera singer Fortunata Tedesco was nearing home and hearth. Smythe, a Marblehead man, could buy medicine for his sick mother and visit her every day. Warren would be reunited with his wife and four-year old son. And Hawthorne yearned for news of his twin brother, who was manning the whaler Nantucket as it cruised in frigid waters. [Author's Note: The Nantucket was wrecked by a whale in 1859 off the shores of Nashawena Island, killing several on board, including Hawthorne's brother.]

But this blizzard that had materialized out of nowhere was far worse than anything they'd seen during the crossing from Cadiz, from which the Tedesco had left laden with her cargo. So close to home, and now this; even that dirty weather they navigated off the coast of the Azores was nothing compared to a New England Nor'easter.

"Don't listen to Old Joe," Revere added, lifting a still giggling Jeffrey off the bench and onto the deck and lightening the mood. "He's been stealing the key to the spirit room again." The table fell apart laughing once again.

Old Joe swilled his grog greedily, wiped his mouth on his torn sleeve, and with his jowls still dripping, returned to his stagecraft.

"Oh no, I know what I'm on about! Waters not far from here...in a storm just like this..."

The sound of pipes interrupted him, and when the sailing master's voice boomed "All hands about the ship!" they sprang to their feet, galloped up the steps, and ran to their stations. Revere, a direct descendant, father-to-son of Paul Revere and whose coat of arms depicts a lantern in a lighthouse, beams of light streaming from it raced to take up his spot in the crow's nest of the mainmast, keeping watch like his ancestor before him. Dodge sped forward to the jib, one of only two sails the ship was wearing as the wind had grown in ferocity since he went below decks for mess. Van der Meer, the crew's lone Dutchman and a man whose grandfather had survived the British navy's attack and seizure of the merchant ship Furie by the H.M.S. Sirius in 1798, manned the forestaysail. Warren and Hawthorne took their places at the mainmast and mizzen.

It had been a glorious day, but as the sun set, black clouds had begun to roil, obscuring the night sky. The swell was increasing as was the wind. When the wind blows and the clouds gather in the forties latitudes, a storm could intensify with extraordinary speed, and a seemingly sweet day could turn into a boiling darkness in mere minutes, as this one did, full of racing water and mountainous waves. In the cabin, the barometer glass had sunk frighteningly low, and the green water swelled to a white curl. The howl in the rigging grew higher and louder by far, a banshee shriek. A grey-black haze descended like a curtain, then a whirlwind of white snow.

"The Ghost Ships a-comin'" Old Joe warned van der Meer. "You better hold fast."

Van der Meer didn't argue, his eyes as wide as little Jeffrey's a few moments earlier.

On the quarterdeck, Captain Herman Peterson was grim, but resolute. His sextant was useless with no stars in the night sky to navigate by and the whole world a whirling white of snow – the visibility of the inside of a milk bottle. But he had seen a lone white light twinkling in the distance, and the lookouts had confirmed it. "Boston Harbor" he thought, and the ship made for the light as though it were an angel beckoning them.

And that was their ultimate undoing. In the blizzard, they had missed Boston Harbor. The white light they saw in the distance wasn't Boston, it was Ed Rock Lighthouse and Little's Point, and a labyrinth of razor-sharp rocks lay between them and port. Tossed inexorably shoreward by both the unremitting waves and unyielding winds, the ship was sailing straight into the rocky maze.

Years later, the Ed Rock light was beamed in red, not white, so as to assuage any confusion. But with an almighty gale sweeping over a mile of sea, the lone light in the storm was a will-of-the-wisp luring the sailors on the rocks. No siren's call was ever so deadly.

The cargo bark Tedesco suddenly looked alone and forlorn, the boundless ocean and the merciless blizzard gathering their full strength, the ship a helpless plaything in the iron grip.

Over the tempest the men heard the voice of Higgins the sailing master. "Jib and forestaysail! Give her half a point!" But beneath the steely courage in his voice an icy fear froze his veins. They were dangerously undermanned, a mere crew of 12 to steer and rig a three-masted ship that required a full compliment of 20 men divided into two watches to handle her dual rigging, both square and fore-and-aft. The men were already exhausted from sailing short-handed, and with the maelstrom howling violently, the likelihood of being dismasted was rising. If a mast fell, the ship would broach to and be dragged under the mountainous waves, the instant death of everyone on board.

Revere, sharp-eyed as his ancestor, was the first to see the rocks through the snow, but wind and tide were too strong.

"Rocks!" he cried. "Dead ahead!" A response came back immediately.

"All hands about the ship! Hoist the _____ and lower the _____," shouted Higgins, but his voice was drowned out, and his men couldn't make out the orders. Confusion reigned for a moment, and then there was an enormous shuddering crash that boomed and echoed, followed quickly by a rending of timbers. The ship had struck the Rock. The whole ship gave a tremendous lurch leeward, and men were thrown from their feet into the air. Wooden shrapnel and nails flew everywhere. One particularly large shard struck Warren in the head, knocking him to the deck.

A moment later there was a loud cracking sound and the mainmast lurched sideways. The stays broke away, ropes flew, and then mast, sail, and crow's nest with Revere still in it were carried right away over the side and into the sea.

"Man overboard!" cried Jacobs, the first mate, but there was no time to respond. Green water and blood blinded the Captain, who struggled to get to his knees. The rigging was pulling the front of the ship under the water, turning the Tedesco almost completely on her broadside, on her beam ends, broached to.

Another mountainous wave swept over her with a white curl. There was a blur of sail, a tumult of rigging, and flying spars, and then a shattering of timbers as the waves smashed the ship into the rock again and again, dragging men and what was left of the vessel under a behemoth wave of green foam.

The next morning dawned cold and clear. To their astonishment, the fisherman who had left their boats a little below the high water mark returned to find nothing but shards and shrapnel, flotsam and jetsam. Bodies of the crew had washed up on Whale Beach, and broken wreckage lay all along the coast.

The bright sunshine and profound silence, punctuated only by the soothing roll of the waves, was a horrible sort of irony.

---Swampscott, Massachusetts, 1899

The summer home of Mr. H. O. Houghton, Jr.---

The three were splendid agreement. The two ladies from Cambridge and their gentleman friend would commission a few holes of golf along the Swampscott shore, 65 acres between Little's Point and Puran Road. 15 local residents had pledged the princely sum of $500.00 apiece, and construction would soon begin on a clubhouse, a bathhouse for beachgoers, and a shed for the members' horses.

"What shall we call it?" asked Mrs. Arthur Little.

Henry Oscar Houghton, Jr. scratched his aquiline nose. He looked around the drawing room. On one wall hung a portrait of his father, the founder of Houghton-Mifflin Publishing, and later, the Mayor of Cambridge. Across the room the wall was dominated by an enormous map of eastern Massachusetts. On another wall hung an oil painting of a three-masted ship floating on the waves, its sails full and billowing.

"Tedesco," Houghton said, nodding. "We'll name it after the ship that wrecked upon Long Rock."

"Tedesco Rock," corrected Mrs. Little.

"Tedesco Rock," repeated Houghton, ignoring the minor social faux pas. Correcting a gentleman was a lady's privilege. "In memory of those who lost their lives," he concluded.

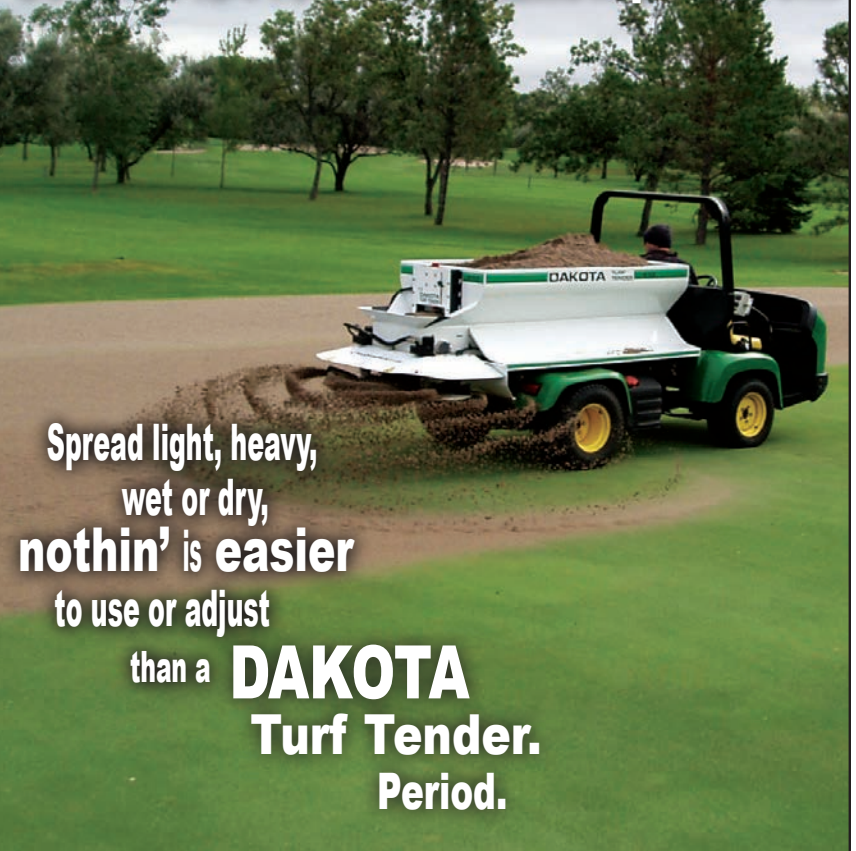

The ladies agreed, it was a glowing tribute and a worthy foundation upon which to build the club. It was done, and handsomely done at that.

Cranberry Golf Course: Do What You Love

by Linda Parker

In many ways the Cranberry Golf Course by Living Water Resorts is not so very different from other resort or semi-private golf courses. Like many, well-maintained facilities set in an exceptionally scenic locale, this course is loved by resort guests, timeshare owners and its membership. Yet, in other important ways, there is clearly something that sets this Collingwood, Ontario, golf course and resort apart from the crowd. Perhaps that's because the resort management bases all its decisions on owner, Larry Law's demonstrated commitment to servant leadership.

The property that today includes Living Stone Golf Resort, Living bustling urban expanse of Canada's largest city seems far removed from the serenity of Collingwood. Here families and couples vacation year-round. They bike on a network of trails, peruse quaint shops and take advantage of every aspect of the Living Water Resort facilities, which have been expanded from Law's initial purchase with over 350 guestrooms including condo-style vacation suites, a 5,000-square-foot indoor spa with Aquapath™ hydrotherapy, a marina, four restaurants and children's camps.

Across these many amenities, the staff is united by a corporate mission to "...be caring, and care for others, as well as inspiring each

A Strong Core

Tony Frake is the Course Superintendent. He first came to Cranberry Golf Course in 2001 as the Assistant Superintendent. Over the years, he and his crew have facilitated many updates and accomplishments on the course, which today sees approximately 24,000 rounds of golf annually.

Tony relies on Mechanic Mike Boone and Assistant Superintendent Stephen Moore, who like Tony, work year around. Although the ten other members of his crew work seasonally, seven crewmembers return year after year, with some of them having worked at Cranberry ren Smith and Vice President Don Buckle give towards me. They value my opinions and allow me to do my job to the best of my ability."

A Changing Landscape

As every golf superintendent knows, even though you love your job, no one can call it easy work. In 2010 and 2011, Cranberry Golf Course underwent major renovations. For Tony, this period probably ranks as his most challenging time on the job. "To accommodate future development surrounding the golf course, we changed all but two holes. With the help of architect David Moote, the course was redesigned with an emphasis on safety for future homeowners."

Recently, the crew at Cranberry has been involved in an effort to reduce the course's environmental footprint. "We decided to move towards unmaintained grass in areas that don't need to be maintained in order to play the golf course," said Tony. "By letting these areas of grass grow long, we're saving manpower, reducing or eliminating the need to mow or trim, and saving water, fertilizer and chemicals in the process.

"The initiative started with an article that Warren Smith, our Executive Vice President read and brought to Larry and me. He thought it would be a responsible thing to do in this day and age. Larry and I agreed, and we have made significant efforts towards accomplishing this."

This type of environmental responsibility is certainly par for the course for Cranberry Golf, Canada's first Audubon Society certified golf course and recipient of the prestigious Environmental Stewardship Award.

The 19th Hole at Cranberry Golf Course is Not What You Think

The scorecard for the Cranberry Golf Course, which plays 6618 yards from the back tees, shows the standard 18 holes. However, play 18 holes at Cranberry and you'll have the opportunity to play one more.

Although the course offers the Station on the Green Bar & Grill, an exceptional clubhouse and dining patio overlooking the 1st hole, this pub-style eatery isn't considered the "19th hole" at Cranberry. Instead, the 19th hole is an actual 100- to 150-yard golf hole intended as a fun ending hole or what is sometimes called a bye or bonus hole. This extra hole gives golfers the opportunity to play one more hole, break a tie, settle their bets or perhaps determine who is picking up the tab in the clubhouse.

The par three 19th hole is only one of many ways the crew at Cranberry Golf Course works to ensure that the golfing experience there is both fun and memorable. For example, the Pro Shop is housed in a beautifully restored Canadian National Railway Stayner train station. And to best accommodate the playing abilities of all its golfers, the course features four traditional sets of tee markers plus a unique mix and match system of "hybrid tees" that effectively yields the playability of six different tee locations.

It's Optional

Tony is quick to credit Head Golf

Professional Myles Bradford for his, "tireless efforts towards growing the membership, making the club the place to play in the area and taking the course to another level." He'll also tell you how the efforts and dedication of Executive Vice President Warren Smith and Vice President Don Buckle have changed the resort for the better. As true as these facts are, it's obvious that Tony understands Larry Law's wishes that his employees be servant leaders, leading by service to others.

On especially hot or tedious workdays or when the maintenance crew has been working long hours in the rain, Tony often defines additional tasks with a one-word response of "optional". He recognizes that sometimes the corporate mission to "be caring, and care for others" simply means giving your hardworking crew the option to stay and work or go home.

We're not just in the business... WE MADE IT!

Our large inventory allows us to supply any tire need for any machine or vehicle.

THE Flotation Tire Specialists!

Golf Course Superintendents nationwide have proven that Pump's Flotation Tires are essential during delicate operations:

• TOP DRESSING • SPRAYING • MOWING • BACK FILLING TRAPS • AERATING

The large contact area of the flotation tire effectively distributes load over a broad area. This produces lower unit ground pressure, resulting in minimized soil compaction. Our custom built wheel and tire combinations will convert your golf course equipment into the most productive tools you will ever own.
