Ebola Threat: Protecting Your Owners

By Sharon Scott, RRP

Recent nationwide hysteria resulting from the first case of the Ebola virus to be reported on U.S. soil jarred the traveling public, particularly when word surfaced that the earliest victim's nurse flew halfway across the country the day before she went to the hospital with symptoms. According to an article in the October-November 2014 AARP The News, "Germs in the News," by Julie Bain, millions of Americans are infected with antibiotic-resistant "superbugs" each year. Bain's list of illnesses might turn the stomach of the staunchest medical specialist. Here are her picks:

Chikungunya is a mosquito-borne disease and can be contracted in Africa, Asia, parts of Europe, the Caribbean and has migrated to Florida. Scientists are working on a vaccine, but wearing long-sleeved shirts and full-length pants, plus a layer of mosquito repellent is the best type of protection for your owners/members for now to avoid joining the more than 570,000 estimated cases.

Similar to Ebola in that it is transmitted through physical contact is MRSA, which used to be confined to hospitals but is now becoming common in gyms and sports facilities as MRSA-CA (community-acquired MRSA). COMMUNITY ACQUIRED MRSA is transmitted through physical contact with an infected person. Resort staff – particularly those working in housekeeping and activities– need to be reminded to wash their hands frequently and to keep any scrapes or cuts bandaged.

If your resort is in a wooded area, then Lyme Disease can be contracted through exposure to deer ticks. You might want to provide sample-sized insect repellent at the front desk and suggest that your outdoorsy minded visitors wear light-colored clothing if they're tromping through the flora. (Ticks will be more visible.)

And what about the frequent outbreaks

of Norovirus on cruise ships? It turns out this virus can spread through any close contact and through food. The CDC says, "Norovirus spreads very easily and causes vomiting and diarrhea. There's no vaccine to prevent infection and no drug to treat it. Wash your hands often and follow simple tips to stay healthy...." The tips include such things as washing hands with soap and water or using an alcohol-based hand sanitizer. Anyone on your team who handles food should especially be reminded of these basics.

Bain advises that while the "freak-out factor" about Ebola is as high as it gets these days, the real risk is minimal. If anyone working at or traveling to your resort is at all likely to have visited Liberia, Guinea or Sierra Leone, then you might have something to worry about.

Furthermore, most of these contagions are spread through direct contact with an insect or person; they have a short "shelf life" once they are outside the body

Nathan Bertram, MasterCorp's Director of ED&T, reassures both guests and housekeepers who may be overly concerned. "The purpose of a thorough general clean is to remove all evidence of prior human presence. During the cleaning process, housekeepers use gloves to remove trash and linens. Regardless of the situation, they consider all bodily fluids as hazardous and utilize Red Bag Handler procedures."

MasterCorp encourages scheduled deep cleans and floor care, which increase the effectiveness of the weekly general cleans. Where a contagion is suspected or confirmed, the housekeeping managers work directly with resort management to develop an appropriate plan of action.

One extra measure the resort may choose to take to reassure owners where a contagion is suspected is to use a hospital-grade sterilant and sporicide in the unit. "We suggest disinfecting bathroom and kitchen areas with our Ygiene 206 solution," says spokesperson from SpectraSan.

Are you Sustainable?

By R. Scott MacGregor

In ecology, "sustainability" refers to how biological systems remain diverse and productive. As a social and business concept, sustainability relates to efforts to incorporate environmentally-friendly processes within homes, businesses, and communities. The premise is that conservation of environmental resources will help to sustain the livability of our planet. Over time, the term has been applied to more than just green initiatives; organizations have adopted the term to encompass policies and processes that are intended to produce positive environmental, economic, and even political, technological or interpersonal results over the long term. Timeshare resorts, in striving to meet their mandate to deliver a long-term vacation ownership experience that remains enjoyable and valuable, are great candidates for the adoption of the "sustainability" concept to guide and measure their efforts to fulfill those obligations.

The hotel industry was an early adopter of the sustainability challenge, embracing building and operating policies that saved money, were ecologically-friendly, and resonated with their customers who valued these initiatives. For timeshare resorts, the associations who govern them and the boards and managers charged with the responsibilities of fulfilling both the written and the unwritten promises of the vacation ownership experience, sustainability is also a valuable guiding principal.

To be sustainable, by definition the policy or practice must be long-term in application, efficient with physical, human and economic resources, and able to be consistently applied. A sustainable timeshare resort is one that can deliver an enjoyable and valuable ownership experience over the long term. It's more than just being green, although that's one of its many components. Resort sustainability involves financial, competitive, social, and legal considerations. And as with any metrics we employ to measure our progress toward achieving goals, such considerations have to be observable and measurable to be manageable and meaningful. Of course, all resulting policies and concepts must comply with legal and regulatory guidelines, and provide a healthy, safe and fulfilling environment for the resort's employees, owners, and guests.

Financial sustainability is the ability to meet the resort's physical and operational needs. Its measures include the ability to pay all of the current year's financial obligations with the current year's revenues – no borrowing from reserves or next year's assessments – and fully-funded cash reserves for future maintenance and renovations. To meet the value test for its owners, these financial goals must be met with annual owner assessments that support the core value proposition of vacation ownership – better accommodations, delivered more efficiently than rental or whole-ownership options.

One measure now commonly employed to measure the relative financial value of vacation ownership among properties is the cost of ownership (the maintenance fees and taxes) per the number of RCI or II points (or trading power) for the interval. For the analytic, this is an objective and useful measure of where an investment in vacation ownership will yield the greatest bang for the buck. It has been fueled by the introduction of points as a vacation currency by the exchange companies and many developers and their growing acceptance by consumers, and by the transparency and immediacy of the Internet. This potent combination has given consumers a powerful tool to help guide their vacation investments more intelligently and predictably. The other side of that coin is that it stratifies many consumers into one of two groups – those viewing timeshare points as a commodity, and seeking to own the optimal amount at the lowest possible cost per point, and those looking for an ownership experience built around a particular destination, a place where the emotional value of ownership exceeds the financial value. For resorts, this means taking a long, hard look at how they're most likely to be perceived – as a highly-desirable destination or as a best-value-for-the-money destination. Clearly, the optimal goal is to be both, but for many resorts that just isn't an achievable result. If their maintenance fees per point are higher than others, and they aren't a high-demand destination, their option is to reduce their maintenance fees which will probably result in them failing to meet the other tests of sustainability.

Overall, this commoditization of timeshare interests isn't a bad thing; it's inevitable in the modern environment, and it is forcing boards and managers to consider their core value proposition in the marketplace – low cost, high demand or both. It's only dangerous if a resort's leadership assumes the resort is something that it really isn't, and they pursue an operating strategy that will ultimately deliver less long-term value to its owners, or if too many resorts begin competing to be the lowest-cost option, driving resort quality downward. If a resort's maintenance fees are relatively high, it has to be a high-demand, unique destination where owners and guests perceive that their investment is in more than just accommodations; there must be an air of exclusivity or an emotional bond that merits its higher cost. If it can keep its maintenance fees relatively low, it must be able to maintain its physical, financial, and environmental integrity while providing a safe and supportive environment for its staff and guests, without special assessments. These considerations are doubly hard for smaller resorts and those located in highly seasonal markets due to their smaller economic base and/or concentration of value within a smaller portion of the year.

Other important measures of financial sustainability include rental and resale values. Rental rates that, on average, exceed the maintenance fee are an obvious indicator of strong ownership value. Strong rentals are critical as the resort's second most important source of revenues, and one of its primary channels for attracting potential new owners. Resale values reflect demand for the product and are the key indicator that an owner has exit options when they want or need to end their ownership. From the resort's perspective, it must have a sustainable outlet for the resale of the intervals it inevitably recovers. If it does, it can also implement policies to take deedbacks when appropriate and support its owners' resale efforts. Resorts that offer their intervals for $0 or at giveaway prices are broadcasting that ownership there has little or no value, and are failing thereby to meet one of the core promises of the timeshare concept. That certainly isn't a sustainable course. Here's a hint: advertise the intervals at a higher price, indicate that prices are heading up, not down, and acknowledge that "reasonable offers will be considered."

Competitive sustainability is an extension of the rental and resale values and the overall value proposition of the resort. The resort must be among the more desirable destinations within its community to assure that those incoming revenues and new owners will continue into the future. Resorts that are actively monitoring and improving their standing in the many online peer-review and rating sites like TimeshareAdvisor and TripAdvisor and within other social media are those whose long-term sustainability is most assured.

Traditional communication channels have always been important to a destination's social sustainability. A great reputation built by great "word of mouth" recommendations and written reviews in credible print and broadcast media are still important marketing tools. The marvels of modern communications have made social sustainability both easier to access and more important to the resort's identity. Managing the resort's online reputation, promoting its visibility in online rental channels, communicating with current and potential customers, and posting current, engaging content are some of the hallmarks of online social sustainability. But society's traditional marketing communication methods can't be forsaken. An engaged dialogue with our owners through electronic, written, spoken (remember what telephones are for?) and in-person communications support the social contract we have with our owners. When they bought a timeshare, they joined a community, and being a member of a strong community is one of those non-financial values that enhance the overall ownership experience.

The resort is also part of the community in which it is located; if it actively participates and contributes to that community, its social sustainability is enhanced. Resort managers should interact with the other resort and hotel managers in the community – and they'll probably be surprised at how supportive that group can be. Attendance at Chamber of Commerce functions and city planning meetings, and participation in service organizations like Rotary, increase the resort's visibility and win friends and allies. For resorts that have the space or facilities, hosting meetings of the local innkeepers' or Realtors group, or even festivals, craft fairs or youth groups are valuable social and marketing opportunities.

Complying with local ordinances and with the association's governing documents, and potentially changing them to meet the changing times are examples of legal sustainability. At the municipal level, this involves being engaged in local zoning and planning initiatives. Some resorts have sunset provisions in their declarations, or business charters that require renewal. Many resorts are now considering trust and points regimes to modernize and add flexibility to their use plans. Keeping abreast of changes and keeping the resort legally compliant and updated add to the likelihood that it will remain relevant as a valued vacation destination.

The ecological principles from which the sustainability concept grew remain a core component of the resort's strategy. There is ample guidance available in public media on environmentally-friendly "green" initiatives that resorts can employ to reduce costs, protect the environment, and appeal to modern consumer expectations.

Virtually every major task or program can be viewed through the lens of sustainability. In risk management, insurance policies must keep pace with the times. Imagining catastrophic events, which could be a legal event or failure of a major system as well as an act of God, is a form of visualizing sustainability. Consider that cyber-liability and employment practices coverages were, until recently, thought of as esoteric, and are now all but mandatory. Design is more than fashion; functional aspects like the support of wireless devices and gadgets, and comfortable public meeting spaces are at the top of consumer expectations. Is the resort's team – its board, management, staff, and suppliers -- going to be around forever, or are replacements being cultivated?

When thinking about their future, enlightened boards and managers use capital reserve plans and five or ten-year strategic plans to plot their course forward and anticipate challenges and opportunities. As resorts age, the needs and desires of their owners change, and their environments evolve, resort leaders must ask themselves: "Is this property sustainable? If so how do we keep it that way and if not, what are our alternatives?" As in an ecological system, all the elements of sustainability are interconnected, and a strategic plan must probe all of these elements. Short-term decisions yield only short-term results, and can often limit more valuable long term options. If a resort can't make decisions for the long-term, it may be that its long-term options are very limited. Adding the concept of sustainability into the planning process is a great tool for ensuring that the resort won't merely continue to exist, but that it is likely to thrive for years to come.

RESORT MANAGEMENT

Getting it Right: An Interview with Loren Gallagher, President and CEO of Vacation Resorts International and Trading Places International

By Judy Kenninger, RRP

Following their purchase by Interval Leisure Group, Vacation Resorts International and Trading Places International, two of the industry's leading resort management companies, moved into a common headquarters in Lake Forest, California. Loren Gallagher, who serves as president and CEO for both firms, recently sat down with Resort Trades to discuss best practices in resort management and how the two companies are benefiting from the chance to compare techniques and systems.

RT: How is it working to have two, previously competing, companies share one headquarters?

LG: We quickly realized that we had a great opportunity to conduct side-by-side comparisons of our differing business models. For example, we studied how each team prepared for association board and annual meetings. We adopted the best ideas of each company, and we now have a "best practices" approach to our meeting preparations. Our board members benefit because the meeting work product is extensive, complete, and delivered timely and our post-meeting follow-up is carefully documented and reported. This process reduces the length of board meetings and facilitates more fluid decision-making by board members. VRI and TPI share a common set of values that govern our work flow and work product. Although our approaches were different, we shared a common goal – to serve our owners and boards in a timely, efficient, and thorough manner. Our senior leadership teams are highly experienced and veterans of the timeshare footprint. This collective experience is routinely applied for the benefit of our board members and timeshare owners RT: You mention the importance of good, regular communications. What specifically do you mean by that?

LG: Sometimes we become so absorbed by our daily work that we overlook the critical importance of communication—with our owners, our boards, and with one another. We must recognize that consistent communication with our board members regarding even mundane aspects of our management efforts improves their ability to become effective decision-makers during board meetings, and they greatly appreciate it.

It is also important that we routinely recognize our employees' achievements and success stories. Our corporate growth and the addition of new team members have required us to find new ways to share information.

We have developed an internal "best practices" communication policy that combines the old with the new. Sometimes, an email is simply the wrong method—you just need to pick up the phone and call someone. Direct communication is often preferred because it is more personal than sending an email. "Direct" includes, at times, a quick telephone call and, other times, getting up from your desk and walking down the hall to discuss a key topic with another team member. Direct communication reduces the possibility of mixed message that often accompanies an email.

In a busy work environment and a sense that "everyone needs to receive my message," the number of daily emails in the "In" box can quickly become excessive. We encourage our team members to stop and think before hitting the "send" button. Is this email necessary? Do I need to copy everyone listed in the original distribution? Does the sender expect me to respond at all?

We take our owner communications very seriously. We continually train our on-site teams in principles and techniques of customer care and service. We conduct special sessions each week at our managed resorts where owners and guests can meet and greet the on-site management team and explore answers to all their resort and vacation program questions. We take full advantage of every regularly-scheduled association owner mailing to include information and "extras" that will further enhance the vacation experience.

solutions. In the interim, our senior executive group will continue to proactively work to limit the "transfer company" challenge that has plagued our industry in recent years and taken unfair advantage of our aging owners.

We are sensitive to chain-of-title issues and encourage our boards to adopt a reasonable deed-in-lieu of foreclosure policy. Some board members will argue that the association has no need for more weeks in its name if it can't sell the ones that it already owns. The weakness of that decision rests with the high cost of foreclosure once the owner loses the willingness to execute a deed-in-lieu or can no longer be found. These policies typically require the owner to be current in payment of maintenance fees and pay one additional year of maintenance fee to qualify for deed-in-lieu consideration. We understand that many aging owners are unable to sell or gift their timeshare and face the temptation to simply abandon it. Our "best practice" is to work with this owner to find solutions.

We are very focused as a company on resale solutions and have created very successful resale programs on both local and regional levels. And, we have raised the bar on our resale strategy sessions to include the possibility of making legal adjustments to historical governing documents to create greater vacation flexibility with much improved appeal to today's timeshare consumer. More than ever before, it is time for the industry, and VRI/TPI, to "think outside the box" and that is an area where our teams truly excel!

RT: Are there any areas where you think VRI and TPI are getting it right?

LG: That is a loaded question, right? Admittedly, we've learned many important lessons in our 30+ years of timeshare management focus but I can now state unequivocally that we get a whole lot more right than we get wrong! Our best practices all boil down to one simple truth: people who trust us with their dollars deserve to receive the benefit of their bargain. If we don't smile when they arrive, we have failed. If we don't provide a clean room, we have failed.

If we don't continually educate our owners how to get the most from their vacation ownership so they understand the opportunities, we have failed.

The best practices are ones that ensure that our owners receive the full benefit of the vacation bargain they purchased. Great service and friendly smiles by resort staff can often make up for aging room décor, floor plan, and size. In this age of social media, unthinking staff can hurt your resort's reputation in an instant. Now, more than ever, we have to get it right the first time.

RT: It seems every resort in the industry is facing the same issues, one of them being an aging owner base. What are VRI and TPI doing to help resorts deal with this?

LG: It has been difficult for us to observe the aging of our owners who have been happy timeshare owners for the past several decades but who have reached a time when they can no longer enjoy their vacation. In some instances, we have developed site-specific resale programs. In other instances, we've created policies for adoption by the board that authorize the transfer of title to the association and that relieve the owner from the continuing maintenance fee obligation. This is a complicated challenge, not just to VRI and TPI but to the entire timeshare industry. Although we are finding solutions on a limited basis, we are fully engaged and committed to finding broader

M^{and}O[®] DIRECTORY LISTINGS

Management and Operations

Remember our Management & Operations (MANDO) magazine? In 2012, MANDO was folded into the "mothership," the Resort Trades news journal because of the overlap in readership and content.

Since this is the only print publication mailed to Every Resort, Every Month, as well as to 5,700+ recipients whose interests range from resort development, sales and marketing and HOA management to procurement of goods and services for resorts, we are delighted to add the Mando Directory. This new section will appear monthly and will attempt to list every resort management company operating in the timeshare industry we can identify.

If you notice any errors or omissions from this list, please write to SharonINK@TheTrades.com.

Even after Cancer, my husband still thinks I'm HOT!

Travel To Go • Track Results • Condominium Travel Club • Holiday Systems • BuyaTimeshare.com

At 35, I had my baseline mammogram and didn't think anything about it. I had no family history and no issues, but the radiologist called. They wanted me to do an ultrasound. Then a biopsy. Then the radiologist gave me the diagnosis which was that I had cancer. They wished me "good luck." Nothing is good or lucky about cancer.

I worked at a deli and my husband worked as the produce clerk in a grocery store. We had little money. My doctor recommended a double mastectomy. Immediately I worried about my self image but my husband was simply amazing, providing understanding, love and care... and even admires my battle scar.

Like others, I experienced a host of hospitalizations, with three drains in my breast with complications. I had problems with chemotherapy ending with an allergic reaction and yet another hospitalization. Then an incisional hernia repair from the transflap procedure. I did not know how we could possibly pay all these medical bills. I swore never to go to a hospital again.

On September 25, 2014, I did return to the hospital, but this time it brought me good news. I landed a job in the dietary department. I am starting to enjoy life. My husband still thinks I am "HOT," and thanks to Diamond Resorts and Send Me On Vacation, we get to go on a spectacular vacation to reunite the love and passion we once shared as a normal couple. I just know my new normal will be even better than the old one, because it will start out with a dream vacation!

Send Me on Vacation Mission
 To Provide a much needed vacation to women with breast cancer who have undergone treatment and need a place to rejuvenate and heal their body, mind and spirit.

Our Cause
 Many women who have experienced treatment for cancer will tell you that when the physical aspects of the battle end, the emotional struggles begin. The adverse effects of the treatment can leave women, their families and friends in shambles. We believe that an essential step in surviving this experience is to provide survivors with a well deserved vacation to CELEBRATE life!

BENEFITS OF TRAVEL CLUB MEMBERSHIP

TRAVEL TO GO HELPS MEMBERS TRAVEL ON A PERSONALIZED BUDGET

When we take a look at a vacation budget, accommodations and transportation usually take a large portion of the expense. Depending on the location the traveler chooses, accommodations usually come first. Travel To Go places the style of accommodations as the most important feature for a member's satisfaction. Lessons from the Timeshare industry proved that comfort, luxury and a great amenity package is the choice of most travelers. Studios to 2 bedroom units provide more privacy, kitchen facilities, modern pool decks, workout centers and many more lavish extras. The consumer has become accustomed to these amenities when vacationing. The one obstacle the consumer faces when planning this type of vacation is justifying the expense. In the past, vacationers had to either purchase a timeshare for a large amount of money or book a hotel. The first instinct by many consumers is to opt for a hotel because of perceived lower prices, giving up the luxury and comfort of the nicer resorts.

ENTER TRAVEL TO GO. We have a large selection of inventory in very popular destinations. When we present the cost of a condo week's stay to the member in the same price range as the hotels in that area, we gain their confidence. Once we have consumer confidence, our members consistently opt for condo week stays for future vacation plans. At Travel To Go we have access to approximately one million different weeks in timeshare properties at a fraction of other online travel agencies' cost. Sometimes up to 70% lower. By instilling that type of saving perspective in the member's mindset, it helps the member broaden their vacation horizons while populating dollars for the POA's and secondary revenue streams for the resort venues. First rate accommodations at a lower cost also gives our member more money to spend on destination travel to exotic or dream destinations.

Travel To Go provides the member with the flexibility of enjoying other vacation options. In addition to condo week stays, we provide our members with hotels at a discount, cruises at a below retail rate, and custom trip and travel packages. Travel To Go has its own internal travel agency that works with the members on an individual basis providing concierge services to meet each member's needs. It gives that personal touch to help the member decide exactly what type of vacation experience they truly want. We take it one step further by facilitating all aspects of the vacation booking in-house. We combine these benefits with an online platform which gives members the opportunity to book vacations on their own. From one night stays to major vacations, the members have a variety of flexible options that some other fulfillment companies simply do not offer.

FOR OUR DISTRIBUTORS. We provide up-to-date product training to our distributor sales crews on a regular basis. This helps distributors have lower cancellation rates and minimal charge back rates from their merchant processors.

Individually, these pieces can't work alone, however, when all of these parts are assembled together, Travel To Go can help its members travel on their personalized budget.

A BIG THANK YOU

to all of those who attended RCI's 2014 Lunch and Learn Tour. We had a blast seeing all of you over the course of the year and look forward to seeing you again in 2015.

THANK YOU TO OUR TOUR SPONSORS:

SUPPLIER PROFILE

MotorDolly: The Lightest, Most Durable Motorized Handtruck Ever!

The Challenger X-14 is a battery-operated unit that can operate in either an upright mode, or convertible mode to move items such as soda, food or other items that need to be transported around your facility.

The X-14 has a 1,200 lb. Capacity and with its new battery technology, will run all day long!

We also manufacture a product called the Multi-Tug. It can be moved from one cart to another so that you can use the tug on several different carts that will have our hitches on them. The carts for moving linens, supplies, and equipment are usually taller than the person having to move them, making it impossible to see what's in front of them. With our tug, your staff can pull these carts and see exactly where they are going at all times. The Multi-Tug will move up to 1,000 lbs.

Our Maid Easy product is a "Kit" that is designed to fit under almost any laundry cart. It has a 1,200 lb. Capacity and is great for dedicated carts in certain areas ...such as linen or poolside.

All of these products are based on the same concept; in that they are battery powered, no noise, and have onboard chargers. They will stop and lock whenever the operator takes their hand off the handle. Therefore, making them completely safe on ramps; they can be plugged into any electrical outlet when not in use to charge. They move as easily over carpeting as wood or vinyl flooring...even concrete.

Lift Free Products is addressing the high cost of workers compensation claims in many industries by offering these fully motorized products at an affordable price.

We also have lease programs available to fit any budget.

The goal at LFP, Inc. is to assure your staff a Better - Faster - Safer way of doing their job
